Dear Conscious Discipline Family,

As we move into a new season of hope with the COVID-19 pandemic beginning to decline, I can't help but marvel at all we've weathered. If the past year has shown us anything, it's that resiliency and a healthy social-emotional skillset are keystones to the well-being of not just the educational community, but our entire society.

Collectively, we've been hit by wave after wave of uncertainty that has stretched many of us in ways we'd never imagined. Raising and educating physically, socially and emotionally healthy children has become exponentially more difficult, demonstrating the urgent need to address the social and emotional learning (SEL) of adults.

When we invest in adult SEL, we empower parents and educators to teach children SEL through modeling and coaching. Most of the greatest lessons we impart come not through direct instruction, but from the way we approach our everyday. For many of us, everyday life remains deeply challenging, even with so many hopeful signs on the horizon. Conscious Discipline has been offering hope, transformation, guidance and effective SEL to adults first and children second for 25 years, and we are here to support you now more than ever.

It is critical that we equip ourselves and our children with the inner resources to manage what's happening out there in the world, as well as the emotional and moral strength to facilitate internal changes as needed. Relying on threat and punishment to control one another erodes our moral fabric into a constant "us and them" fight. We must shift to creating cultures of safety, connection and problem-solving led by adults who demonstrate healthy self-regulatory and social and emotional skills. In Conscious Discipline, we call this model the School Family. It embeds trauma sensitivity into daily school life, promotes unity and belonging, provides the foundation for racial equity, and integrates neuroscience so academic achievement will soar for all children, especially those who struggle or have been marginalized. It is clear why Conscious Discipline has a 25-year record of success, and why CASEL awarded Conscious Discipline its highest designation for evidence-based programs in 2020.

Join us in our vision of an interconnected world of conscious adults who are capable of responding instead of reacting to conflict in order to create safe homes, safe schools, safe communities and a safe planet.

I Wish You Well,

Becky A. Bailey
